Definition of a Thesis statement:

A thesis statement is a concise summary of the main argument or purpose of an essay or research paper, usually appearing at the end of the introduction. It acts as a roadmap for the reader, clearly stating the paper's topic, your position, and how you will support it. A strong thesis is specific, arguable, and provides a blueprint for the rest of the paper.

The characteristics of a thesis statement

1_ A concise summary: It is typically one or two sentences that briefly encapsulates the paper's main idea.

2_ An argument: It should make a specific, arguable claim that requires evidence and analysis to support, rather than just stating a fact.

3_ A roadmap: It tells the reader what to expect by outlining the essay's structure and the writer's approach to the topic.

4_ Located in the introduction: It is usually placed at the end of the first paragraph to introduce the rest of the paper's content.

What are the 5 rules of a thesis statement?

1_ A good thesis statement should:

2_ Be debatable.

3_ Can be supported.

4_ Makes a clear, specific point.

5_ Make the reader care about your stance.

6_ Answer the essay's prompt or question.

7_ Not contain a question
