

Postgraduate studies

The Department of New and Renewable Energy offers a bachelor's degree program, and a postgraduate program (Master's) has recently been established as a significant step toward enhancing scientific research and developing specialized competencies in renewable and sustainable energy technologies, in line with scientific advancements and labor market needs.

